Caring for your oilskin & Burel

Two exceptional materials. Each with its own character. Both built to last.

DAILY CARE

For cleaning, brush off any loose dirt. For the oilskin, wipe down with a cold damp cloth — no soap — and hang to dry in a warm place. For the Burel, a gentle brush when dry is usually all it needs; the dense structure releases most surface dirt on its own.

OILSKIN

LIVING WITH WAXED COTTON

Over time, the wax softens and shifts with wear — seams develop depth, high-friction areas take on a patina. This is character, not wear. The coat keeps a record of where it's been.

RE-WAXING

When water stops beading off, stand the wax tin in hot water until softened. Rub it firmly into the fabric — don't paint it on. Focus on seams and friction areas; no excess. Finish with a hairdryer, then hang overnight in a warm room. Once a year for regular use.

BUREL

CLEANING

Spot clean only — cold water, worked in gently with a soft cloth. Press out moisture in a clean towel; never wring. Lay flat to dry away from heat.

STORAGE

Oilskin: cool, dry, and ventilated — never sealed; the fabric needs to breathe. Burel: air occasionally to keep the wool fresh.

> ### ALWAYS AVOID
>
> No machine washing, tumble drying, or dry cleaning. No soap or detergent on the oilskin. Never wring or twist the Burel. Do not iron directly on either material.
